Located at the eastern edge of the rolling Sayama Hills, Hachikokuyama Park stretches along the Tokyo-Saitama border. The name Hachikokuyama, originates in the fact that the mountains of eight old provinces are visible from the peak. Those provinces are Kozuke, Shimotsuke, Hitachi, Awa, Sagami, Suruga, Shinano, and Kai.

The ridge road, spanning 1.9-kilometers across prefectural borders, is easy to walk with moderate ups and downs. Hikers can enjoy the flowers of the Clethraceae family and yamazakura cherry as they walk. South from the ridge road are numerous paths that lead to well-lit openings in the quiet of the forest, perfect for a light picnic. Also worth noting is the birdwatching area around the Futatsu ponds in the south part of the park.
